It is thickly coated in layers of glossy green paint and it is evident that there are localised areas of flaking and rust spalding on the column and barrel. The Foundry mark and Deanta I Neirinn insignia is distinguishable due to its form, albeit heavily coated in paint and illegible. The pump cap was removed some years ago and a neighbour made a replacement top out of a series of circular plywood discs stacked to form a pyramid silicone was used to fill the joints, then over painted. Roadside/enclosed area/public furniture/additional features/markings/manufacturer	The pump base is a concrete platform which is believed to be original also. A concrete block wall encloses the pump and forms a bay recessed on the east side of the road (L5100) at the location known as Dornaville. A concrete trough remains at the front of the pump which forms part of the concrete platform/drainage tray. Made by Tonge and Taggart Foundry, Windmill Lane, Dublin. Installed in 1911 (according to an article in the Drogheda Independent on 15/02/1911). Cast to the specification of Anthony Scott, District Architect and Engineer of Balrothery Rural District Council. A square timber plank flower bed is planted around the pump base, concealing the bolt heads and base plate of the column.	c. 1911		Community	2025

NA04	Cabinhill	Naul	R108		713613	760135	Water Pump	Cast Iron	Green	Tonge & Taggart, Dublin	Freestanding	Yes	Public	Good	No	Pump is in good condition. It retains a cowtail pump handle with ball finial/weight. Original pump cap also in-situ. Internal mechanisms - Pump rod missing, iron liner shaft missing. Pump was reinstated in July 2025 to its original position from where it was removed from in 1989. A new iron baseplate was bedded out with mortar and anchored to the original concrete pump plinth with bolts. The painted plate was bedded out and a reclaimed cut limestone chimney cap from a gate lodge at Milverton, Skerries was layed on the baseplate which perfectly matched the plint footprint. The pump shaft was then bolted to recieving bolt rods, sat exactly over its original position and the void around the shaft was filled with cement mortar to the cap surface. This was done to ensure the structure was more firmly secured this time and is much more difficult to remove.	Manufactured by Tonge and Taggart, Dublin at Windmill Lane Foundary c.1908. Featuring the first registered Irish Industrial Trademark 'Deanta I nEirinn' insignia. Patent No. 0 107. A Cast Iron suction Water Pump, with round/circular section column with fluted profile as pump head base. A straight spout with hook for holding a bucket in place. The pump cap is circular in profile with a double bell stepped profile and acorn finial. A haunched bracket on the side of the pump head connects a cowtail handle terminated by a bulbous tear drop finial. The pump is set in a reclaimed cut-limestone chimney cap from a demolished chimney at a gate lodge in Milverton, Skerries. One of a pair which was mirrored.	c. 1908		Community	2025
